The Osgoode Legal and Business Guide to Climate Change

Understanding the New Realities

According to the UN, global emissions are reaching record levels and show no sign of peaking. The impacts of climate change are being felt everywhere.

As individuals, governments, corporations, and organizations – large and small – grapple with climate change and the complex web of issues it raises, legal professionals must be prepared to provide effective advice and counsel in these changing times. Whether you work in transactional law, corporate governance, or litigation, there are a host of considerations and developments you need to know.

The OsgoodePD Managing the Legal Responsibilities and Risks of Climate Change will give you critical information and guidance on the emerging legal and regulatory issues, along with proactive strategies to combat urgent climate change-related risks and mitigate potential liability.

Topics Include

- Overview of the major climate change issues and emerging legal considerations: practical applications for properly advising your clients
- Impact of climate change on corporate transactions and finance
- Understanding the evolving roles and duties for corporate directors and officers
- ESG and human rights criteria and risk management
- Recent developments in climate change liability and litigation
- Legal strategies being deployed to combat the negative effects of climate change and opportunities under the common law, statutes and the Charter

Who Should Attend

- Corporate and Commercial Lawyers
- Litigators
- Corporate Directors and Officers

Cynthia Williams

Osler Chair in Business Law,
Osgoode Hall Law School

Effective corporate governance includes taking a proactive role given the new realities resulting from climate change. In order to successfully navigate these, legal advisors and executives must ensure their organizations assume a strong leadership role, and embrace and understand the evolving duties and responsibilities.

- Corporate and fiduciary duties – emerging common law and statutory director's duties, and what counsel need to know
- Stranded assets: when resources can no longer provide an economic return due to transition to low-carbon
- Role of corporate directors and investment trustees in developing strategies to adapt to climate change
- Strategies to ensure effective and thorough due diligence

Climate Change Litigation and Human Rights Claims: Anticipating and Avoiding New Liabilities

Kristin Casper

Senior Legal Counsel Strategic Litigation, Greenpeace International

David Estrin

Certified Environmental Law Specialist,
Distinguished Adjunct Professor,
Osgoode Hall Law School

In a short period of time, more than 1,000 climate litigation cases have been filed worldwide. Recent and escalating developments in different jurisdictions demonstrate the need for all legal professionals, board members and organizations to keep up-to-speed on these rapidly developing new legal principles and corresponding strategies to reduce liability and combat the negative effects of climate change. Hear from experienced litigators about the latest and most pressing issues in climate change-related litigation in Canada, the U.S. and beyond, including:

- Mass tort liability
- New developments, cases, and opportunities in Canadian citizen litigation
- Other less explored legal strategies and opportunities under common law, statutes and the Charter
- Citizen litigation in other countries
- IBA Model Statute for Proceedings Challenging Government Failings to Act on Climate Change
- Lessons from international climate jurisprudence and pending claims against companies and governments

The Politics of Climate Change and Effects on Law and Regulation

The Program Faculty

The saying "All politics are local" rings true when witnessing how laws and regulations are shaped by all three levels of government in Canada in responding to global climate change. The lack of certainty about the timeframe and degree of impact of climate change generates controversy whenever governments take actions to address the problem, and will continue to do so. With the results of the October 2019 federal election as a starting point, the panel will take stock of the current and future direction of crucial climate change-related laws and regulations that affect commercial life in Canada, and what legal advisors and corporations need to know. Topics include:

- The 2019 Canadian federal election results and impact on business regulations
- Recent noteworthy initiatives at provincial and U.S. state levels
- Government response to pressures from international agreements and treaties
