Derivatives Law and Practice

The global derivatives market is vast and infinitely complex, and the number of corporations, financial institutions, and asset managers turning to these financial instruments to better manage risk and increase returns continues to grow.

Valued at trillions of dollars, derivative trading underpins the global economy, yet most people have a vague understanding of the mechanics of how these products and the governing laws and regulations work.

This OsgoodePD program is a unique opportunity for finance and legal professionals to acquire skills and understanding in the key elements and legal requirements of these critical financial contracts, while also delving into latest new developments in this complex and evolving field.

NOTE: You must attend both Day 1 and Day 2 (either live or recorded) in order to count this course towards the Certificate in Securities Law and Practice

The New Regulatory Regime for Security-Based Swaps: What You Need to Know

Craig Roberts

Managing Director, Global Funding and
Treasury, National Bank of Canada

Jeff Robins

Partner, Debevoise & Plimpton LLP

Key new provisions under the Dodd-Frank Act came into effect in late 2021, requiring security-based swaps (SBS) entities to register with the U.S. Securities Exchange Commission and adhere to various requirements, including capital, margin, and segregation, as well as SBS transaction data reporting.

Get a critical update on how the new regime is working, as well as the rationale and substance of the new rules, its comprehensive framework, and how they impact the global derivatives market, and practical strategies for compliance.
